Lexical analysis involves identifying what each item on the input is, and outputting a stream of tokens and symbols.

Syntax analysis involves checking that the tokens are put together in some legitimate order.

Semantic checking ensures that the resulting program is semantically correct (e.g., correct types etc).

Global data captures remote relationships inside the program.